Details: Zombie strippers

Story:
 The world has changed. All the world's strippers and women who have thought about stripping are flesh-eating zombies. One geeky guy tries to survive. He has a bunch of rules that help him. There's also a bad -ass killer who joins him. Not to mention two good looking women. The tough-ass guy wants a cake baked from scratch. They encounter a white rapper who is getting the stripper zombies to dance for him. They encounter a pimp at the mall. Then there's Grambo. And there's a lot of stripper zombies. There's even a cross-dressing action star. And what will happen when they get to Portland, Oregon--stripper central.

Running Time:

103 Minutes

Aspect Ratio:

16:9

User comments:Good Parody

As you might guess from the title and plot description, Stripperland is basically a parody of Zombieland. That is their main source as the plot has a ton of parallels between the two, such as the listing of rules and the appearance of a famous star who gets killed along with the desire for some kind of sweet food. I have to admit I did laugh when Frisco noted that Twinkies would be easy to get as they were common and would last forever. But there are a ton of other movies that this one parodies. It goes after Star Trek and Star Wars. There are a whole series of popular song titles thrown together by a cult about to make a sacrifice. There's a parallel to Rambo. There's a mad scientist. And, best of all, it actually works. The people can act well. The actor who plays the geeky guy sounds exactly like the main character from Zombieland. The women were hot. The blood and gore was great. The make-up was well done. It was a fun movie.

I give Stripperland 8 out of 10.
