Iggy Pop: Lust For Life
Iggy Pop, Ron Asheton
Retrospective gems from the snake hipped one.

It may only clock in at a mere 41 minutes, but the most recent addition to the catalogue of Iggy merch sure knows how to pack it in. Filmed in 86 on his Blah Blah Blah album tour, 'Lust For Life' shows Pop in his glory days- talking musical inspirations (including an admission that 'No Fun' was heavily based on Johnny Cash's 'Walk The Line'), sparking off to interviewers and writing around the stage like he's had a sexy electric shock. The dutch voiceover may make any kind of narrative completely indiscernible but there's enough singular moments courtesy of Iggy and the late Ron Asheton for it to barely matter. Best of all are the lengthy performance clips which show some of the album's highlights in their entirety rather than, as is so often the case in these kind of DVDs, teasing us with 30 seconds and taking it away. If you're a fan, it's essential; if you're not then you could well be converted.
