

GG Allin - Terror in America: Live 1993
(DVD, Music Video Distributors)

After being released from prison and recording his final album with The Murder Junkies in 1993, GG Allin hit the road again to abuse himself and his fans. This DVD features concert footage from three concerts: Ashbury Park, NJ (April 25, 1993), Austin, TX (May 18, 1993), and Atlanta, GA (May 15, 1993). The Ashbury Park show is the best in terms of quality. The video and sound are both impressive (particularly when compared to many other DVD releases). GG gets so bloody during this show that it is almost difficult to watch. The Atlanta show is more typical GG...questionable sound and video...a much more sloppy performance in which GG wears nothing but an American flag covering his crotch. The Austin show is the real treat here, probably due to the fact that the crowd is much more lively and interactive. So much so that much of the concert turns into a screaming and fighting match between GG and his "fans." Our favorite part of the show is when GG sets fire to his "crotch flag" ...putting it out at the last minute before it (presumably) would have done damage to his not-so-private parts. There are some extras that present the more "human side" of the man. GG fans will love this. Others will, of course, hate it. And that was, of course, always GG's main goal anyway...to elicit hate. (Rating: 4++++)
