

► LoudQUIETloud: A Film About The Pixies: Watching a band break up can be as good, if not better, than a round of ultimate fighting. But watching a band get back together after a few years of estrangement is really the stuff documentary filmmakers dream about in the hours before Christmas morning. If you're not a Pixies fan, chances are you won't get the same thrill as a Doolittle-lover, but you'll still be drawn into the drama of Steven Cantor and Matthew Culkin's documentary that follows the cult band as it picks up the pieces and heads back on tour after more than a decade of hostility. Featuring incredible access to the band that inspired Kurt Cobain to write Smells Like Teen Spirit, LoudQUIETloud investigates what pulled the band apart, and revises the myth of hipster cool as everyone emerges as a slight headcase suffering from huge bouts of low self-esteem. If you thought being a Pixie looked like fun, think again. These are some of the unhappiest and most insecure people you'll ever see. Great human moments, absolute candour as well as excellent live performance footage make this impossible to resist.

DVD features include bonus scenes such as scoring the film with Daniel Lanois, Steve Albini and Girls with Insurance, Midterm Break, Sigur Ros, A Music Shop with Kim and Listening to WJUL Radio Session. ★★★★★
