Review- Where do I start with this movie? To be fair, I think if this came out in 1996-99, it would have been better received. This movie is about Jake who is a wrestling promoter who loses his license when someone has a heart attack and dies in his ring. So, he decides to hold a tournament, that the finals will be to the death for 3 million dollars. Way to shake that stigma as being a promoter who had death in his ring.

Al Snow plays Frosty, who is a friend of Jake's and also the commentator. Now, this is the weird part. They list Brutus Beefcake as his co host, but that was not Brutus that was a actor set to look like him poorly. Al Snow, I will say is a true acting talent. I never seen anyone read a cue card quite like him, his range is up there with DeNiro and Nicholson. And, oh man the mistakes. At one point he says 3 million dollar prize like 5 times during the match and then when he talks to the winner..and yes he says 5 million dollars. I am like no way..then in next scene its 3 million again. He was unsure what the prize was. And how can they come up with this money when they were not even sure if they are online or on ppv. At one point the promoter tells his lackey we have 10 million to make sure no one is killed and they said that this is online only and has 25 million watchers. Ok, so its a death match premise. So why are the announcers saying it makes them sick to watch someone get hit or beat up and get upset when the referee don't stop it. Isn't this a death match? No offense if your in a death match, why wouldn't you bring a weapon. A gun, bazooka. That way, you wont have to dirty your hands. You are going to murder someone, why not just eliminate the work? And for this kind of show, why did they do it in a school gym with 25 people? I am supposed to believe this show can produce 3 or possibly 5 million dollars for me to walk away free and clear. Seriously. This whole crew between the 50 of them could not cough up a decent script or good actors, but they have millions for murder. OMG some of the fight scenes in this movie were so hokey. A cinderblock to the head. Not only could you tell the cinderblock was foam, but he did not even hit him in the head with foam. It was bad. Al Snow on commentary was all about stating the obvious over and over. " Tonight someone is going to die".. " I am telling you folks real honest to goodness death" " And the winner will get 3 million dollars" pause one two ..

could change your life forever"...." these fighters have three million reasons to fight tonight" ..this was non stop. " its a death tournament folks one person will die tonight". Then, at the end of the movie, he gets mad cause someone does die. You dumb idiot all night you talked about it, and it happens and you get mad. In the credits yes I watched the credits..they have a woman named Nancy Fart in production. 2011's oscars..and the oscar for best production in a movie goes to Nancy Fart for Ultimate Death Match. This movie has a second and third one in the works. I cant wait..
