If you're someone who enjoys small-budget \(#\)

B-horror movies, then I have three DVDs that may just pique your interest. First, let's go back to the year

1986, when this first movie in this review was made:

"Truth or Dare: A Critical Madness." This movie centers

\(#\) on a man that catches his wife cheating on him and goes crazy after playing a game \(#\) of Truth or Dare with a female hitchhiker. The rest of the film consists of him going in and out of a psych ward, trying to get revenge on his wife and lover then just completely losing it and killing random people.

"Lights Camera Dead" (2007) is about two of amateur filmmakers trying to make a horror movie. When their so-called cast and crew walk out on them they decided to get revenge by killing all of them, but of course \(#\) filming it the entire time.

Then there is "Inbred Redneck Vampires" (2004, aka "Bloodsucking Redneck Vampires"), about a female vampire that is running from a mysterious vampire hunter. She, along with her human caretaker, takes refuge in a small town full of rednecks that they decided to recruit \(#\) and turn into vampires. Turns out that wasn't the brightest idea.

Surprisingly, out of all three movies I found myself enjoying "Inbred Redneck Vampires." Obviously from the title you know that it's not taking itself too seriously. Actually, all the movies in this quicky review had a comedic element to them, but I found myself chuckling more to "Redneck Vampires," while the other two films tended to fall a little short in the humor department. If your interested in any of the three movies click on the titles below for more info.
