Under the Radar DVD of the Week: 'Inbred Redneck Vampires'

Posted on June 28th, 2010 at 11:33 am | 0 Comments | DVD, wimgo movies

At the opposite end of the blockbuster bloodsucker spectrum from the romantic, high-toned “Twilight” sagas is “Inbred Redneck Vampires,” a micro-budgeted, direct-to-DVD comedy set to hit video shelves on Tuesday.

Repackaged and reconfigured from a 2004 release titled “Bloodsucking Redneck Vampires,” this new version slightly ups the ante on gross-out gags (lots of PC boundary pushing and explosive baked beans jokes) and hitches a quick ride on the considerable “Twilight” coattails.

The ultra-lowbrow story focuses on Catherine (Felicia Pandolfi), a sexy vampire on the run who shows up in a redneck burg called Backwash and prepares to do battle with a relentless vampire hunter who has vowed to drive a stake through her heart.

As Catherine hatches a plan to turn local yokels into her army of vampire slaves, town matriarch Ma Poissier welcomes swishy interior designer Jean-Claude Les Eaux into her home after winning a complimentary room redecoration. While the fey Frenchman tries his best to fit in with crazy hillbillies like Lil’ Junior and his buddy Cletus, rowdy rounds of beer drinking, bean eating, tripe cooking, shower peeping, competitive farting and strip poker lead up to the town’s annual Tripe Days Festival and a showdown between Catherine and her pursuer.

As we said, a far cry from the classy, dewy doings of the “Twilight” vampires. But then, director Joe Sherlock clearly has a penchant for low-end horror, with a resume that includes titles such as “Monster in the Garage,” “Monster in My Car,” ““Odd Noggins,” “Werewolf Tales” and “We Need Earth Women!”

“Inbred Redneck Vampires” is not rated and runs 108 minutes. It’s being released by SRS Cinema.
