The Shadowy Possibility of Becoming Responsible

Finally got the whole Student Loan mess over with. I'm still bitter about the upstairs neighbours being douche nuggets (they threw my loan forms in the recycling bin, instead of, oh, I don't know, LEAVING THEM IN THE MAILBOX) but what can you do. I feel a passive aggressive note may be in order. However, it's water under the bridge now, since I'll have my money in 5 to 7 days. YAY!

I'm seriously contemplating going to see The Human Centipede at the Mayfair, but every part of me knows I will only regret it. I should probably just use that 6$ on beer. Or a different movie. Speaking of movies, I got to go see Night of the Living Dead: Reanimated, which was pretty neat. The abstract art in it was a little too fucked, and made it hard to follow, but the concept behind the movie was cool. Now I just need to be patient until The Walking Dead starts airing. SO MANY ZOMBIES. I also need to get out and see Machete. So many movies, so little time. Well, not time, but money.

I had a really great idea for a comic the other day (well, I thought it was great, at least) but I'm gonna need some time to iron out the details. I had briefly contemplated just keeping it written, but I honestly think it will be so much cooler with images. Making a movie would be out of the question, though (no time, no money, no equipment, etc) At least with a comic I could feasibly use Photoshop, thereby avoiding the whole lack-of-artistic-talent thing. Huzzah.

Classes are finally started, but it still hasn't really sunk in yet. I've already tried to get started on some of my early assignments, but I think I'm gonna have to talk to my managers, seeing as they seem

ABOUT ME

DEVIN
CANADA

So, basically I go to Carleton University, with the hopes of someday figuring out exactly what to do with my life. I started a blog to keep my friends/family back home updated on the tomfoolery that goes on here. I like the word tomfoolery.

to have misunderstood my availability. As much as I love having no week days free between school and work, it's something I'd much rather avoid.

In happier news, I seem to have finally gotten the hang of typing on this tiny infernal machine. My words actually come out looking like words, rather than someone's drunk-texts after a 2-6 of tequila. I seem to be having issues with the secure wireless at Carleton, though, and I can't figure out if it's from my end or theirs. I'm also contemplating ditching the bullshit starter windows and just getting ubuntu, although I'm slightly concerned that I may not be tech-savvy enough to get away with it. Maybe I should just settle for using the standard Carleton Wireless. It's not like I'm doing my banking in the library or anything. Well I guess I've wasted enough time at the library. My class starts in 2 hours, so I may as well start wandering over there.

As a final note, if you're looking for some good music to check out, try The Suburbs by Arcade Fire. It's pretty fantastic.

Adieu
