"I finally pulled it off. I managed, with a lot of help from friends, to get a screening of Night of the Living Dead: Reanimated together. So here is the rundown for now. On July 22nd, 2010 at 9 PM, The Film Reel will be hosting a free screening of NOTLD:R at The Toronto Underground Cinema. Even though it's a free screening, there will be a charity involved. I'm hoping that everyone who attends will bring one or more DVDs as a donation to the Toronto Public Library system. Right now I'm focusing on a specific branch, the Beaches location, and the reason is that they have a weekly movie screening on Wednesdays and even have Anime screenings for teens during March Break.

Now, if the donation gets really large then the DVDs will be split up among the different branches but for now I'm just focusing on the one and we'll see how the donating goes. I realize that a lot of the readers out there can't make it to the screening since plenty of you don't even live in Canada! If anyone is interested in still making a donation then you can contact me through the blog, my email \(CLICK HERE\) is listed right up at the top now and I know people can see it because my junk email has skyrocketed since I put it up there! HAHA! I'm really hoping that there is a great response to this.

There is an incredible amount of artwork in here and it can be both hilarious and absolutely stunning. I haven't sat down to the entire film myself yet but I'll be putting up a review for it soon. I did watch the first little bit and this is the kind of thing that is going to have audiences divided right from the start. This is not so much a film as it is an art show on screen. I've found it very hard to explain to people just exactly how it works. It's not a straight up animated version of Night of the Living Dead. What they've done is taken the audio from NOTLD and put art over top of it as the visual.

Just one small example of some of the art involved.

Tons of different art styles by over a hundred artists are combined to make up the feature. There are puppets, stop motion, still drawings, comic book pages and animated sequences all in there. I was speaking to Mike recently and he was commenting how some people were blown away by the film and others would leave the theater before it was finished. It's certainly something I've ever experienced before and while it doesn't seem to be what I was expecting, what I have seen I enjoyed.

A touch of the comic book style here.

Scenes aren't animated in one style. Take the beginning of the film. Anyone who has seen Night of the Living Dead knows what happens. Barbara and Johnny are heading to the cemetery where they are attacked by an undead ghoul. During this scene, numerous styles of art are used. There are some still shots, there's a stop motion part, there's a part where puppets are used, each moment bringing it's personal visual style to the project. It can be jarring at first. I wasn't expecting it and I was a little shocked but some of the art was so incredible that I couldn't stop. Of course I had to stop because it was the middle of the day and one of my kids wanted to watch TV. Always being the loving father, I let them take over. I'll have you know that I pouted over it for a little bit though! HAHA!

One of the earlier scenes in the film.

Everyone in the area should come and check it out, I mean, it is free right! To celebrate me actually getting off my ass and doing something with my days I'll be having a contest soon. I have a couple of posters to give away and I'll be giving away some copies of the DVD. Now, it isn't out yet so you'll have to wait until my order comes in before I can ship them out to winners. There's lots of time to enter and I'll probably have the contest running until the screening happens but I will give away the posters before that. I'm thinking maybe one winner a week until the end, or until I run out of posters! All you have to do to enter is submit a zombie haiku on the contest page. Not yet though, let me get it up and running first and you should be able to enter by the end of the week.

I'm really excited for this screening and there should be some more information surrounding the screening coming soon. I can't reveal any details until they're set in stone but I should have some good stuff in store. I want to thank everyone who has helped me out lately. Mostly my girlfriend for putting up with my insane ravings. I find I piece things together when I tell them out loud to someone except I don't care if the person understands what I'm talking about, it just helps me to say it out loud. My girlfriend is always on the receiving end of this. A huge thanks to Mike Schneider who has not only given me the flick to screen but has passed on tons of advice, info and support. If it hadn't been for him there would have been lots of important questions that I didn't ask. Finally I wanna thank my friend Nadia who has also lent support in the organization of the event. She's still busy behind the scenes hooking me up with whatever I may need.

As the screening gets closer I'm sure I'll have more people to thank and I'll make sure to keep everyone updated on all the little details. Oh, and I also bought my passes to Toronto After Dark which begins in August so be prepared for an overload of After Dark info coming very soon!
