It certainly is a never-ending battle between the Palm Pre and Apple's iTunes. It seems like the recent setback didn't stop Palm from working hard to get its Palm Pre to talk to iTunes again, and with its latest webOS 1.2.1 update, syncing with iTunes 9.0.1 is back. This latest update should be pushed out to Palm Pre users, so keep an eye out for the update! Permalink: Palm Pre Syncs With iTunes Again from Ubergizmo | Hot: iPhone 3GS Review

Stability and certainty from ownership and a new arena to solid young talent means brighter days ahead for the Nets■

But there was change. Just a little.■

Not everyone seems to accept the word from Mount Apple.■

I was 10 when I first saw Peter, Paul & Mary looking out of an album cover with their names chalked on a brick wall. I memorized their features as I listened to their voices. I could not believe so much music came from three singers, two guitars, and a bass. Their harmonies made me feel cradled in sound. They were too cool for me, of course, not to mention older by 15 or 20 years, but I felt they were my people. Why not? I could play all their songs, except for a couple of the bar chords

Things just keep getting worse for the Celtics as Paul Pierce may have a broken foot.■

When we first saw Vodaphone's ringtone commercial where 1000 cell phones perform a section of the William Tell overture, we just assumed it was some slick video editing, not to be taken seriously. Apparently, we were wrong. They actually did this. They actually sent text messages to all the phones in correct timing to play the music. In the video after the break, you can see some details on how they pulled it off. They had to perform this during non peak usage hours to ensure that all their t
