"I Need That Record"

In this 2008 documentary, fans of independent record stores explain why they feel it's a shame that thousands of the businesses have closed in the past decade. While this may seem like too narrow a subject to get worked up about, the film's focus widens to include the ailing music industry in general, including the homogenization of radio, the rise of big-box stores, and the demon of downloading. Director Brendan Toller interviews everyone from Chris Frantz of the Talking Heads to thinking head Noam Chomsky. Unrated, 77 minutes. DVD extras: more than two hours of interviews.
