Delirium is a band that has been able to keep audiences enthralled with their unique blend of trip-hop, pop, world music, electronic, and natural sound effects. When listening to their records I'd never imagined that this band ever played live shows. After seeing the Delirium DVD "Epiphany," their live show is much as I would have imagined it. Dimly lit stage, writing female lead singer reaching all levels of high notes and impressively low notes in the same breath, a lot of keyboards, and a tight set drummer is what gets and keeps the band onstage. On this "Epiphany" DVD there is also a lot of dark blue light, a lot of smoke, a lot of projections. This keeps audiences in the moment and in the sound of the music as Delirium plays on.

The DVD packaging of the "Epiphany" concert calls Delirium's shows "paintings in motion." After watching this DVD it looks more to me like a few camera angles and a hyper-active editor who cuts the images in steady rhythm, interrupted sometimes as often as the "rat-tat-tat" of the drummer's snare drum.

The fans in the audience of this Delirium show are something of a trip too. They are all holding up their arms and grooving as though at a gospel church. Still, for fans of Delirium this is a fun DVD. There is obviously a lot of production which goes into a Delirium show so that's something that everyone needs to remember. However the finished product is pretty cool, if rapid changes in images on the screen don't make you seasick.
