@DarkHorseComics I hear ya there. Sorry, sometimes I get a little TOO impatient. Apologies! (Couldn't DM you back - not following me.)

Anyone know of any credit cards out there that have REALLY cool rewards attached to them? Like gift cards, etc., not points you earn.

Editor's Note:

This is one of a selection of reviews we're putting up as mini-podcasts. When you click on the player below, you can listen to the review. Enjoy!

The Snapshot:

The Rolling Stones: Stones in Exile is an excellent documentary regardless of whether you're a Stones fan or not, while The Doors: When You're Strange is an excellent documentary, but more if you are a fan of the band. U2: Let Them Be is a nice two-disc set that suffers from a lack of any involvement from the band.

Paul McCartney Really is Dead is a fake documentary that fails because it pretends it really is real, which is just wrong. Playing For Change Live and Hiromi Kanda: Hiromi in Love are two performance based DVDs. Playing For Change is a really neat package, which includes a CD and a DVD, while Hiromi in Love is only for fans of American standards (preferably if you like them a bit on the quirky side.)
