

HOME	NYC INFO	MUSIC	DINING	FILM	THEATER	ART	SHOPPING	EVENTS	MEDIA GALLERY	BOOK HOTELS	BUSINESS	Français
Events	Interviews	Features	Reviews	Festivals	Videos

FILM

August Docs on Disc

Written by Kevin Filipski

Venice Revealed (Athena), a four-part documentary by British historian Peter Ackroyd, explores one of Italy's most mysterious and beautiful cities through painters, architects, musicians and theater artists. Instead of didactically showing us Venice's glories in a pedantically academic manner, Ackroyd leads us through its rich artistic history by concentrating on 19th century critic John Ruskin in The City as Architecture; great 17th century painter Tintoretto in The City as Art; composer Antonio Vivaldi in The City as Music; and street performers in The City as Theatre. This three-hour series is much more than a companion to Ackroyd's book about Venice: it's also a visually splendid recording of one of the world's greatest—and grandest—repositories of various kinds of art.

Search for hotels

Destination times square

Check-in date
9

Check-out date
10

Show only available hotels

Search

ALSO AVAILABLE...

In David Rothmiller's strongly-argued For My Wife (Cinema Libre), Charlotte Strong tells how she became a marriage equality activist after her partner Kate died and both the hospital and funeral home treated Charlotte with discrimination (best extra: "Meet the Filmmakers" featurette); Four Seasons Lodge (First Run), the name of a Catskills resort, is also an evocative title for Michael Jacob's elegiac documentary of a group of Holocaust survivors that meets yearly to celebrate their second chance at life and remember family members who did not make it to America (best extra: deleted scenes); I Need That Record! (MVD) succinctly shows decades of history of the independent record store and how illegal file-sharing and the internet hastened its demise; The Jeff Koons Show (Microcinema) says all we need to know about this trickster posing as an artist: he's entertaining but emphatically not a revelatory and revolutionary artist like Picasso, to whom he compares himself (lone extra: Koons discusses curating an exhibit); Monarchy—Complete Collection (Acorn) presents the entirety of David Starkey's engrossing 16-part series, on five discs, probing the men and women who have led the British for nearly 1500 years, from early Anglo-Saxon king Offa to Queen Victoria—some episodes were not seen when the series was on PBS; the story of a black teenage girl with white lesbian parents, Off and Running (First Run) incisively documents an unconventional but emphatically normal family (best extra: additional scenes); another transparent attempt to make a buck off the Beatles, Paul McCartney Really Is Dead (MVD) ineptly tries reviving the "Paul is dead" rumor, with a bad George Harrison sound-alike giving shocking "revelations" about Paul's supposed imposter (best extra: vintage footage, Bob Dylan Meets the Beatles); Prodigy—Tiger Woods (Infinity) gives a superficial overview of Woods' life before and after he became the world's most famous—then infamous—golfer (best extra: Golf Back in the Olympics featurette); Stephanie Soechtig's Tapped (Disinformation) soberly lays out how the bottled water business destroys everything: namely, our fresh water supply and our health: it's advocacy journalism in the very best sense (best extra: additional scenes); World War I in Color (Athena), narrated by Kenneth Branagh, unveils hours of fascinating vintage footage from the Great War (in six 50-minute episodes) that has been recently colorized—rather than the black and white images we are used to, a nearly century-old war is brought to immediate life thanks to the vividness of color film (best extra: Tactics & Strategy, a superb 50-minute program detailing how warfare became modern in the 20th century).

< Prev Next >