Elvis Found Alive

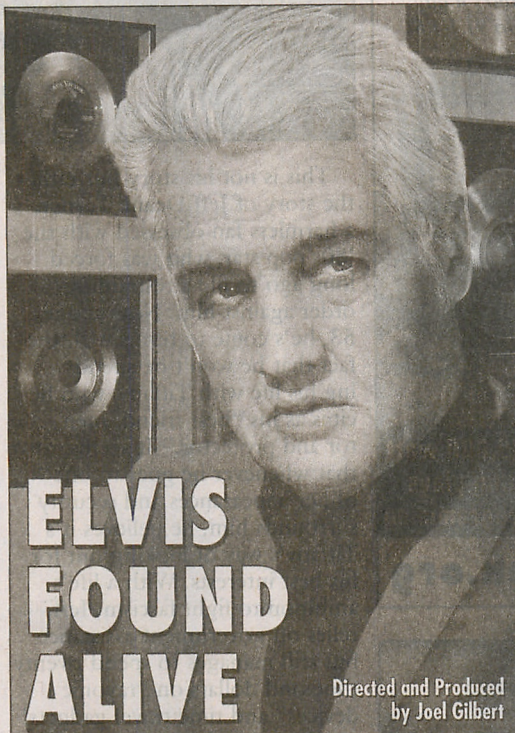

[Highway 61 Entertainment]

"I broke up with a Hollywood starlet and she told me she had a gun. An' I said, 'Baby, I got ten of 'em.'"

It's another daring expose from the house of imaginary alternate history, Highway 61 Entertainment, the same people that supposedly released George Harrison's recorded deathbed confessions about the car accident that killed Paul McCartney, only this time it's the secret life of the first rock star and how he is in a federal witness protection program living in Simi Valley, California, having faked his death.

Following a request under the Freedom of Information Act, documents are delivered with damp ink covering up sensitive material that is easily deciphered by the team at Highway 61. Tracking down the King, it's discovered that as a federal drug enforcement officer, Elvis led a special task force against the Weather Underground and the Black Panthers. After the Weather Underground bombed a San Francisco police station, killing a sergeant whom Elvis knew, he'd had enough. Required to take a three month course in weapons training and physical combat to become a federal agent, his military service hastened the process. President Nixon welcomed his support while others thought it was a publicity stunt, knowing that Elvis collected medallions and badges. But all along, there had been some who felt the King needed to be brought down.

According to this "documentary," upon its release powers that be determined that "Jailhouse Rock" advocated homosexuality, and they saw to it that he got drafted. Threatened with deportation if he interfered, Colonel Tom Parker is exposed as having been an illegal immigrant named Andreas Cornelius Van Kulk!!!! And if you doubt any of this, the proof in fact lies within the pages of Captain Marvel Jr. comic books! Everything that happened to Elvis throughout his career is supported with cartoon panels of similar events in the comics.

Now hold on thar, varmints! Elvis is presented as coming from a family that couldn't even pronounce each other's names. His daddy called him "Evis," leaving out the L. Elvis referred to his momma as "Satnin," he claims because her skin was smooth as satin, or could it have been that she reminded him of Satan?!

This cockamamie bullshit alleges that while in the military, stationed in Germany, numerous attempts were made on his life. After an accident involving faulty brakes, newspapers overseas proclaimed the King was dead. Assigned to jeep duty in freezing temps, an officer who was never found rigged a heating tank to keep Elvis warm and the fumes nearly suffocated the legend, who was hospitalized for what the army said was "tonsillitis"! During "face treatments" (?), a German doctor makes a pass at Elvis, who proceeds to kick his ass, but the doctor disappeared. His off-base house he shared with Vernon gets blown up and it's blamed on East Germany when obviously Jerry Lee Lewis had more motive.

Who has disappeared is

Highway 61 Entertainment's star witness: Elvis himself! Shown in shadows due to being in witness protection, the silhouette speaks with a voice similar to what is generally recognized as that of the King, but then, so did Kurt Russell and Nicholas Cage.

Claiming he was threatened by mobsters in the mid '50s when he appeared with Liberace at the New Frontier in Vegas, after Col. Tom ran up gambling debts, it's presumed that this is what led to the decision that after the army Elvis would only make movies.

Man, oh man. I was almost willing to grant this "theory" legitimacy when the bomb drops that he married Priscilla because she reminded him of Mary Marvel, who just so happens to be Captain Marvel Jr.'s sister... according to the folks making this up! Truth be told, they got things confused. Captain Marvel was Billy Batson and Mary Marvel was also a Batson, but Captain Marvel Jr. was a crippled newspaper boy named Freddie Freeman - no relation to the other Marvels. And while that theory might explain why Lisa Marie resembles an inbred, it's ridiculously under-researched.

This idea that Elvis based his hairstyle and dramatic stage pose on Captain Marvel Jr. has circulated for years - remember that one of the King's earliest antics was to grab his left leg and swing back in joint as if his gyrations had temporarily crippled him, and Captain Marvel Jr. was unique for being the first handicapped hero. But there have been competing conspiracy theories about Elvis' behavior. Once, during one of the Little Five Points Halloween Parades, as a float passed, with his Vegas-style cape flapping, an Elvis impersonator pointed at the crowd as if beckoning onlookers to follow. So who could blame a small child for crying out, "Look mom! Elvis is a vampire!" After all, doesn't he doesn't he wear a cape, speak with an accent, collect medallions galore and is reportedly sighted as having risen from the grave?

I was once a patient of "the urologist to the stars," who told me that he was on duty the night they brought Elvis in at the Memphis hospital and pronounced him dead. He saw the body, and confirmed that Elvis had left the building.

Get over it.

Using an enhanced bike helmet, Jeff believes he's in spiritual communication with his idol

This is not his story but rather the story of Jeff Deane Turner, a harmless fan obsessed with the '80s pop star, who was forced long ago to file a restraining order against him. Now at age 53, he's come to terms with the fact that he won't be spending his life with Tiffany, who he cites as his "best friend, mentor and protector." It seems that whenever he goes to one of her appearances and security surrounds him, he believes it's Tiffany's way of looking out for his best interests. With a life's ambition to fight fascism, Jeff relies on government assistance but still manages to spend twenty thousand dollars on "rayonic devices" and time travel gadgets!

After a bike accident, Colorado fan Kelly, an intra-sexual athlete, is depressed because he feels he has the right to be happy, and that means being with Tiffany! Yet, he's being shoved out of her life...even though he's never attended one of her performances or met her! Using an enhanced bike helmet, Jeff believes he's in spiritual communication with his idol and calls her "the most Christ-like person

I know!" Well, she's certainly the most Christ-like person to appear in Playboy.

Drawn to other fans, Jeff and Kelly become friends when the singer acknowledges their attendance at a Las Vegas show... along with everyone else in attendance. Ultimately, thanks to mind-control, Jeff believes himself to be a distant cousin of Tiffany's, so transfers his affection to Alyssa Milano???

As an extra bonus feature, the DVD includes a segment on Preston Nichols' use of music in mind-control experiments where, under vibrating fluorescents, he is able to time travel and walk through walls! Previously involved in clinical masturbation exercises with the Montauk boys, he claims to be able to dematerialize children in his room.
