Ever think about stalking a celebrity? Who would you choose? Angelina Jolie? WRONG! Johnny Depp? WRONG! Brad Pitt? WRONG! Julia Roberts? WRONG! You are being unrealistic! C'mon, think about it. If you want to stalk someone (not that those four haven't had their share of over-ardent fans), shouldn't it be someone who is more accessible? Someone who approaches (or is) your ideal but is either: a) just starting out, or b) on the way out? Gwyneth Paltrow might be a little more difficult to get close to than, say, Leif Garrett, don'tcha think?

I Think We're Alone Now is a documentary that introduces us to two people who share the same obsession—Tiffany. They don't consider themselves stalkers or even fans—just friends. They are both convinced that they have a connection to Tiffany, and that she is their friend who truly cares about them.

The first "friend" introduced is Jeff Turner, a man against whom Tiffany got a restraining order. Tiffany is the center of his life and he communicates with her using a radionics helmet. He maintains files containing hundreds of magazine and newspaper articles about her and has photos of her plastered all over his home. When one first sees Turner, one wouldn't guess that there is something odd about him. However, he has Asperger's syndrome, so his social skills do not fit his society's standards. He laughs too much and seems totally unaware that people walk away from him when he drones on and on.

The second "friend" is Kelly McCormick who is an intersexual who believes that Tiffany connected with him while he was in a coma following a serious accident. Since that time s/he has been totally obsessed with having her be part of his/her life. When s/he attends her show in Las Vegas, it is with the hope that she will be returning to his/her Colorado home with him.
