At the peak of Tiffany's popularity, you literally couldn't go anywhere without hearing "I Think We're Alone Now." And you didn't want to. From roller skating parties to mall elevators, the song was omnipresent and earned the then 16-year-old millions of adoring fans. It also snagged her a stalker who is now the subject of a documentary.

In 1989 Jeff Turner was legally forbidden from writing or calling Tiffany as well as being required to stay 200 yards away at all times. His on-screen partner is Kelly McCormick, a 35-year-old "intersex" person who claims to have been friends with Tiffany as a child.

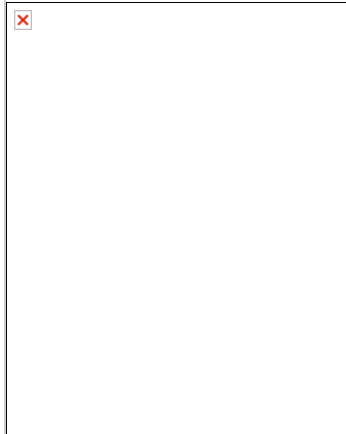

"I Think We're Alone Now" the movie documents Jeff and Kelly's homes, shrines and personal stories that go beyond adoration and creepily border on obsession. The film just hit DVD, so check out the trailer and see if you want to curl up all alone now and watch the movie.
