DVD Review – GG Allin & The Aids Brigade

Live In Boston, 1989

MVD

Folklore can do a lot to inflate the legend of an artist. It's a question of a rumour's dichotomy next to hyperbole. Kurt Cobain didn't really live underneath a bridge. GG Allin, however, did smash his teeth out on stage with a microphone and shit in his hand to then throw into the crowd.

Looking like Axl Rose if he gave up crimping his crimson mane and bathing, GG Allin and the Aids Brigade are first seen rehearsing for their now famous Boston show, where they had to dress in drag disguise to sneak into the bar they'd been banned from in order to play. Unsurprisingly, the band cleverly titled the Aids Brigade, weren't aloud in any venue in the Boston area. The DVD also takes a look at things one would want to see off the stage. One gets a good look at actual personalities as the boys are made up for the show, and discuss lyrical content, as well as thoughts about the upcoming show. The band actually comes of as...human.

Once they hit the stage, though, humanity is far from present. "We're the prettiest girls in Boston, I'd say..." says Allin. "And we fuck."

The band then launches into the Ramones-tinged "Cunt on the Loose" to properly set the tone of the bands performance, followed by slimy renditions of "Hanging out with Jim", "I Wanna Fuck Myself", "Kill the Police", and about 18 others.

The music is not really the point of the DVD, though. The interesting part of this release is seeing an infamous figure who stubbornly stood for nothing, and would die for it. The man was actually very charismatic, and while most people wouldn't be able to identify with the depths of his self-destruction, it's interesting to watch from a distance, and this is the attraction.

Included as bonus content are two full concerts, one in Seattle and one in Portland in '93. This is the perfect companion piece to 'Hated', the GG Allin documentary that came out a few years past, and gives more perspective on the man and the band than a cd would. This should be educational material handed out to any kids sporting Hot Topic-brand Green Day.
