--THE PLOT

Aaah Zombies also released as Wasting Away is a film about a group of friends that turn into zombies after eating some soft serve ice cream they had by mistake flavoured with toxic waste instead of beer. The fluro green soft serve doesn't take long before it turns them into Aaah Zombies.

This zombie movie is done with a difference though. It is taken from the 'zombies' point of view as they lumber about not realising that there is actually anything wrong with them whilst confronted by other peoples reactions to them in their zombie states.

--VIDEO

I'm not a huge fan of the going from black and white to colour technique that they use in this film. I know they are trying to separate points of view by doing so, but I don't think it was really necessary and I found it extremely annoying. Apart from that the video production is fine, nothing spectacular though.

All very audible, not problems at all.

--FINAL THOUGHTS

When I first saw the cover to Aaah Zombies, I was quite excited. I thought yes, another zomedy but with a twist as it's from the zombies perspective. However that is as far as my excitement was permitted to go.

I was not a fan of this movie at all. I know what they were trying to portray however they showed no real skill in doing so. I am astounded that they did not manage to pull this film off with such a large budget at their disposal.

There is nothing worse than a really good idea on paper that fails to deliver on film and that unfortunately sums Aaah Zombies up. I had to stop myself from turning this film off so many times whilst watching it. I like to find at least one redeeming quality about a film but I am battling with this film. The acting was average, the gore was average. Yes the 'plot' was inventive but it failed to deliver what it promised. Okay it may have been Matthew Kohnen's debut film, but please you had a million dollars and that is the best you could do?

Unfortunately I think they could have had ten million dollars and it wouldn't have made an ounce of difference. This movies downfall is the quality of the direction and production. It is a shame it could not have been sold on to someone who 'knew' how to tackle the project with a bit more oomph.

I am pro independent film, I despise that the major Hollywood players seem to rehash classics to get a new generations bums on cinema seats and I think they should give new directors and writers ago, but when you see something like this film, you really can't blame them.
