Aaah! Zombies Movie ReviewAaah! Zombies

2007

directed by: Matthew Kohnen

reviewer: James DePaolo

Plot: Turning the zombie film on its head, this film is an oddball comedy from the perspective of the brain munching monsters themselves.

Review - Like Fido, this is more a comedy than horror. This movie focuses on 4 friends that accidentally get infected and how they cope with being zombies. The movie has a few ideas it lifted from movies such as Re-Animator and Evil Dead 2, but it is 80 percent original. The movie is mostly black and white, and the zombies see in color. Whereas they think the other people are infected, its actually them even though they appear normal to each other. When they come in contact with normal people,

Wednesday Non Horror Movie Reviews

The Secret of Kells reviewer: Jeremy Dunn When the Oscar nominees were announced there was much hubbub over this Irish animated movie competing with the likes of Pixar's Up. After 15 minutes of this on Netflix Instant I thought I was watching a Ren and Stimpy cartoon version of the normal people sound like chipmunks. But, whereas the zombies think they are making communications, they are actually moaning like zombies. The jokes are hit and miss. If this movie was cut to 50 mins and made a short, it would have worked so much better. Some of the scenes, just drag. But, the last twenty mins. of the film were so goofy and just really going for it, that it carried the film. There are other scenes like the bar in the beginning that were decent. The script was ok, the actors gave it a good shot. As a whole, for less than a million dollar budget, I think the movie should find a crowd. It could wind up being a midnight movie on HBO that could be a cult classic. It's worth a watch. And finally a movie, where someone says " hey zombies don't run". The bowling ball bag scene was just ridiculous and for them having the balls to try it, I have to give them points.
