Quite often music fans, young or old will attend concerts by their favorite artists in order to experience and connect with what can often be the “Raw Power” of the music and every once in a while that power actually belongs to the fans. Out only last week from our friends at MVD Visual, 6 fans won the right through an online contest to film Iggy And The Stooges legendary September 3rd 2010 reunion show as the band performed “Raw Power” in its entirety at the All Tomorrow’s Parties Festival and after the show the fans got to interview the band. It’s time for us to get “In Concert” with “Iggy And The Stooges-Raw Power Live: In The Hands Of The Fans”

Documenting this show from the perspective of the fan came off on screen surprisingly well. Cutting together the footage from 6 fans place at various vantage points in the arena gave the entire show a legitimately intimate and borderline professional feel. The entire night simply popped, as the not only the fans but the band looked they were having a fantastic time. Iggy And The Stooges ran through the set list that included such gems as 'Raw Power', 'Search & Destroy' and 'I Wanna Be Your Dog' among many others at break speed and intensity, these guys only know one speed when they perform and it is fast, high pitched intensity that is unmatched by bands half of their age.

The interviews after the show with the fans were also pretty well done, as the fans asked some fairly intelligent questions that just allow the viewer even deeper access into the universe that is Iggy & The Stooges.

In what may go down as one of the best DIY concert films ever put together, the folks at MVD Visual have brought us something pretty special and if you weren't an Iggy And The Stooges fan before "Iggy And The Stooges-Raw Power Live: In The Hands Of The Fans" you will be afterwards.

4 out of 5 stars.
