ThanksKilling (2009)

ThanksKilling (2009)

It seems that every major holiday has its share of movies. Halloween has hundreds of movies, Christmas has thousands. There are movies about Valentine's Day and The Fourth of July. There's even a movie about New Year's Eve that's coming up (and has every actor in the world in it...and looks awful). But one holiday that seems to get the shaft is Thanksgiving. Sure, nearly every sitcom ever has had at least one Thanksgiving themed episode, but I cannot think of any Thanksgiving movies without resorting to Google. Except for one.

Introduced to my wife and I a little over a year ago by showing only the first 5 minutes, we were quickly intrigued. Within a week, we found it on Netflix and watched it. And it was probably the best 66 minutes of film we've ever watched. Made by what I have to assume were college kids for around $3000, ThanksKilling tells the story of a demonic turkey that terrorizes and hunts down a group of teens for seemingly no reason.

I cannot recommend you watch this movie highly enough, unless you are offended by awful movies, terrible puppets, stupid Thanksgiving and turkey-based puns, necro-bestiality jokes, JonBenet Ramsey jokes (3 of them, well, really only the same joke, but they tell it three times), pitiful acting and even worse dialog, then steer clear. The actual tagline is "Gobble, gobble, motherf*%er." I am not kidding. But it's incredibly short and one of the funniest (whether intentionally or otherwise) movies I have ever seen. It's now a Thanksgiving tradition in our house.

Seriously, this is what the turkey looks like (wearing the sheriff's face as a mask, thereby fooling the sheriff's daughter and her friends):

I really can't find any more words for the movie, so check out the trailer.
