Thankskilling is an odd low-budget, independent con flick that you will either absolutely love or completely hate. From what I can tell, there is no in between with this film.

The acting is bad, the camera work is shaky and the effects are laughable, and that doesn't even touch on the preposterous plot. The question is, is it supposed to be then the cast and crew did an excellent job; if not though, then there are way too many problems to really talk about. Either way, I found myself not a fan of the film. While I understand the idea of being purposefully bad in order to make fun of other cheesy-horror films, I still didn't enjoy it.

Soon after the first Thanksgiving, a Native American necromancer raised a turkey from the dead and charged it with killing any white people it came across because of a supposed insult. Now, 505 years later, a group of college students returning home for Thanksgiving have stumbled across the creature's new killing ground (Natasha Cordova), Kristen (Lindsey Anderson), John (Predmore), Billy (Aaron Ringhiser -Carlson) and Darrell (Francis) have to worry about not only staying alive and avoiding the evil bird, but also preserving the lives of their families. The creature will take them out in order to get to these kids.

What results is a series of rather ridiculous encounters. The ax-wielding fowl tricks the students into believing he is their parents or even one of their sex partners, while in the end, it's a strange.

The DVD release is fairly light on special features. It includes a commentary track, a photo gallery, a fan song, a turkey bloopers reel that focuses a lot on the mishaps with the turkey-puppet. This, combined with the love-or-hate nature of the movie means that you should definitely rent the movie before considering buying it. If you fall on the love-side, you'll be making the extra purchase to own a copy. If on the other hand, you don't like it, you won't be out much more than an hour of your time.
