Others looking for a truly funny and inventive parody, ought to find a copy of "Clown Hunt." Barry Tubbs' outrageous comedy takes pot shots at goons-with-guns horror flicks and such Outdoor Channel staples as "Duck Trek," "Women of Hunting" and "Ted Nugent: Spirit of the Wild." Here, the hunters are taking advantage of the open seasons on clowns – one for happy clowns and another for sad ones – in a huge reserve in Texas. The targets come in all shapes, sizes and varieties, from Pierrot to Emmett Kelly. They exist in the wild, doing the same things as any species would do, left to their own devices. Somehow, though, when clowns get back to nature, the results are a million times creepier. In response to the annual assault on their habitat, killer clowns stalk the hunters and bomb them from the air with water balloons. The only recognizable actors in "Clown Hunt" are David Keith, singer Robert Earl Keen and rodeo legend Tuff Hedeman. Among other things, Tubbs proves that a tight budget doesn't necessarily preclude funny material. – Gary Dretzka
