MS. CANNIBAL
HOLOCAUST

A rundown building is to be torn down the very next day, but a handful of tenants are refusing to leave - when a weird woman (Nicola Fiore) shows up with her masked underlings ... who mercilessly attack and kill the tenants one by one, then even eat their flesh. A handful of tenants manage to escape their clutches, but find out they are locked into the building, with no way of communicating with the outside. And the boiler room they are barricading themselves in won't hold forever. It eventually becomes clear that the woman wants bloody revenge on all the tenants of the building because she was gangraped in here, and nobody stepped in to save her.

There is a girl (Kellyn Lindsay) though whom nobody considers more than a junky, and who shoots up in a public bus, even, who has a score to settle with the woman. And even though she looks totally wasted, she has supreme fighting skills and no reservation to hurt and kill her opponents. And she actually manages to fight her way into the building to face the woman for a brutal showdown ...

You might have guessed from my synopsis (and maybe even from the title): Ms. Cannibal Holocaust isn't exactly the most intellectually challenging film, rather it's blunt, it's brutal, and it's gory. But boy, it is effective, a throwback movie to 1970's and early 1980's grindhouse cinema that shows you how it's done. This is not a film that wastes time with genre references or postmodern humour but goes straight for the jugular. Plus it's brilliantly paced and finds the exactly right balance between violence, action and atmosphere. Sure, the film is not for everybody, due to its subject matter as well as in-your-face approach, but if you want to see a genre movie done just right, go and see this one!
