

PIGSHIT: 12 YOU MAY HAVE MISSED IN 2012

Posted on January 25, 2013 by Gary Pig Gold

Those Beach Boys and Rolling Stones weren't the only septuagenarian rockers celebrating 50th (give or take) Anniversaries over the past twelve-or-so months, absolutely not. Just about each and every singer/songwriter/guitarist still standing – well, those with lucratively deep catalogues ripe and ready for recycling, that is – had multiple multi-media packages (and, in the Stones' case, four-figure-plus concert tickets) competing for what remained of a loyal boomer's nest egg throughout 2012.

So should you feel so inclined, unless you're still busy searching for the real Bob Dylan via David Dalton's Book Of The Year "Who Is That Man?" that is, may I wholeheartedly suggest investing in:

The – and this is no hype, either! – "Definitive Collector's Edition" of our beloved Harry Nilsson's The Point, which may indeed have begun life as a humble 1971 animated ABC Television Movie of the Week yet remains today, four decades later, one of the most, yes, pointed socio-pop parables ever produced any where, at any time. Narrated by everyone's favorite cartoon Beatle, Ringo Starr, and of course written, scored and sung by his bosom pal Harry, this newly deluxe package comes complete with four bonus featurettes just to ensure you, well, get the whole point. Which you really, really should.

Also well worth grabbing is a rock 'n' roll comic of an entirely different color. Namely the