highlighted by the son encouraging them to show a word in the margin. "Push it all the way up in shit to say the least.

The second short, and my personal favorite, The Bitches of Bowery, is shot in black and white and tells the story of an innocent but very busty Catholic schoolgirl, (Reina Terror), who walks into a dive bar to wait for her date who never shows up. While sitting at the bar she is spied by a leather-bound trio of lesbians who decide to "take her under their wing". What ensues is an ultra-erotic dream-like sequence, heavy on drugs, alcohol, breast fondling and girl-on-girl lip-locking. After this initiation into the gang, all four girls hit the streets to exact revenge on the guy who stood the girl up on her date. There was a great rockabilly soundtrack to this one, and overall, it definitely got the blood pumping if you know what I mean.

Short number three, Killer Unicorn, is about a young gay man, (Faceboy), who after being bullied by a group of douchebags, makes his way home and soon afterwards receives a mysterious package at his door. Attached to the package is a note stating, "With great power comes great responsibility." Inside the package is a mask in the shape of a unicorn head. Fitting the mask on transforms the effeminate youth into a hulking unicorn-man who proceeds to march back down the street to exact revenge on his tormentors. Goofy scenes of arm-wrestling and doggie-style sex ensue.

The last of the four shorts is Elf Workout. This one features Reverend Jen as the host of an easy-to-follow workout show, shot in her world famous Troll Museum (apartment), alongside all her friends. The exercises include curling beer bottles and ballet moves while opening the fridge to get another beer. Basically showing you how to work up a sweat while getting your drunk on. This one was noteworthy if for nothing else but the sight of Faceboy in a woman's gold sequined leotard, complete with a large piece of fruit stuffed in the crotch.

I found this whole fiasco refreshingly bizarre, original and entertaining. And it reminded me quite a bit of the Saturday Night Live skits of the mid-70's, only much racier at times. Perfectly over-acted, it felt like an incoherent blur of complete insanity. It was pure cheesy goodness, the kind of film you pop in the DVD player with a group of drunk friends and wait to see who will be the first one to blow beer out their nose from laughing so hard. Its low-brow indie-cinema run amok, and reminded me why I love reviewing movies. It is anything but "the same old same old".
