Run. Hide. Die.

A terrorist detonates a dirty bomb in the heart of a densely-populated city, unleashing a gruesome zombie plague that spreads like wildfire. Sarah's father was bleeding out, and she knew he would die if she didn't get him to a hospital fast. The scene that greets them on arrival is one of chaos. The floor, awash with blood, is covered with the bodies of the dying and injured, doctors dart back and forth, clearly overwhelmed. Sarah stumbles back and her world fades to black. Upon regaining consciousness she is greeted by the uneasy silence of a seemingly deserted building....

Our Take:

This movie is about the search for relatives in a hospital by Sarah (Ruth King) and Jay (Kris Tearse) during a zombie epidemic. This independent zombie movie bypasses the George Romero style of victims being disembowled, but the zombies are slow moving, which is the way it should be. There are a few scenes of people getting attacked, but there is no blood or guts shown during them. It looks like director Rhys Davies didn't have enough money in the budget for it or just didn't want it.

Tearse, who also wrote the screenplay, gives the movies top three characters (Sarah, Jay, and Steve) enough heart and soul that you root from them to make it to the end of the movie.

There are funny moments throughout the movie like seeing a doctor use a lighter to check to see if a patient has a concussion instead of their normal pen light and seeing a zombie victim blink in a scene. A patient is giving a shot a la Pulp Fiction.

Special Features:

None

Conclusion:

The director's use of showing the characters through the lens of a security camera was a little tedious at times. The story moved too fast at times such as when the three main survivors comes across another group. One minute, they were by themselves and the next this other group was there. The story was good though, and any zombie fan should enjoy it.
