The Hunt

Director: Thomas Szczepanski

The Story

Alex is a struggling tabloid reporter and his boss is pushing him to come up with some better material or his job is on the line. He gets a lead from a girlfriend stripper about this guy that has a vhs tape that could be scandalous and a huge story. When he goes to the house to steal this, he also finds a bag full of money and other curious objects such as instructions to follow. Desperate for a story he decides to indulge himself and pretends to be the owner of the bag. By secret instructions he arrives at a secluded house and is picked to participate in a deadly game of survival.

My Thoughts

The movie is basically a mixture of 13 Tzemi with a tinge of Hostel and Battle Royale, but not near as good as any of them. It was really well shot and acted from what I could tell (It's French,) but it all felt like it's been done before. The movie tries to be all dramatic and mysterious hoping when the true plot is revealed it would be shocking or intriguing. But With the title called The Hunt, you can pretty much guess where it's gonna lead.

You can guess that the lead is gonna have problems killing someone for sport, so obviously he's gonna try and help some of the victims while trying to survive himself. There are a few good and gory moments fighting the other competitors so I do give it credit for that.

The bottom line is the movie is not great, not shitty, but fits perfectly in the watch it once and forget about it category. It's only been a few days since Ive seen it and I can barely remember how it ends. The movie is too short and too predictable to stand out in the sea of horror. I would only recommend if the story sounds like it would float your boat. For everyone else go on The Hunt (pun inteded) to find something else.

Final Rating: 5.5/10
