Bob Unruh / WNDA filmmaker whose full-length documentary, "Dreams from My Real Father," presents a compelling case that Communist Party USA propagandist Frank Marshall Davis is Barack Obama's biological father, is challenging the U.S. media to begin reporting the truth about the likely Democrat nominee for president in 2012. Joel Gilbert, whose website details his research, appeared recently at the National Press Club in Washington to talk about the questions raised in his film.

"What strikes me as most disturbing is that any one of the hundreds of American journalists in this building could win the Pulitzer Prize just by writing about the evidence presented in 'Dreams from My Real Father,'" he said.

A journalist, after all, is supposed to report the news, truthfully and fairly, he argues. He cited the National Press Club bronze that lists the "Journalist's Creed," as written by Walter Williams when he founded the Missouri School of Journalism more than a century ago. It states: "That journalists must be public trustees with the full measure of responsibility to the public. That accuracy and fairness are fundamental to good journalism. That a single standard of truth must prevail for all."

Pointedly, he noted the credo states "that suppression of the news is indefensible."
