Beer And A Movie: Color Me Obsessed *

Color Me Obsessed and Hugh Bob And The Hustle

There's something missing from Color Me Obsessed, director Gorman Bechard's documentary about Minneapolis music legends The Replacements: the band itself. Bechard purposefully avoided putting Paul Westerberg or his bandmates in the film directly—no interviews, no music, no concert footage, no album covers. But what seems at first to be a self-defeating approach is perhaps uniquely suited to The Replacements, a band so infamously disinterested in its own fame that its members once tried to steal their master tapes and throw them in a river, and flipped the bird to the whole idea of MTV by making a music video consisting entirely of a speaker playing "Bastards Of Young" for three and a half minutes. As its title implies, Color Me Obsessed is about the band's fans as much as it is about the band itself. Milwaukee's own Hugh Bob And The Hustle will perform a set of Replacements tunes following the screening.
