Bath Salt Zombies (2013, Dustin Mills)

Just released from MVD / Aggronautix is a new extreme horror film from Dustin Mills (Zombie A-Hole, Night of the Tentacles) and Clint Weiler (owner of Aggronautix) called Bath Salt Zombies. For anyone wondering what the "Bath Salts" in the film's title is referring to - well it ain't the shit that your grandma pours in the bathtub to help with her dry skin. It is referring to a type of designer drug (that looks like bath salt) which has similar effects to amphetamines and cocaine. So now you know what we're dealing with here.

Bath Salt Zombies stars Brandon Salkil as Ritchie, a punk druggie who is looking for a new fix. He buys some "bath salts" from his dealer Bubbles (Ethan Holey) which has some horrible side effects. You know, like turning you into a flesh eating killer. Turns out that the Bath Salts that Ritchie bought were chemically engineered by Bubbles' friend Sal (Dustin Wade), whose new batch is far stronger and deadlier than anything on the streets. An FBI agent catches on and must find where this new killer drug is coming from.

Bath Salt Zombies is exactly what you'd expect...only better! It has everything a fan of gory horror films would want and it doesn't take itself at all seriously. You get buckets of blood, faces (and other appendages) being ripped off, lots of nudity and potty mouths galore. For a low budget film (reportedly $5,000), the make-up and CGI effects are very well done. I loved the way they made up Ritchie's face at the end of the film when he becomes a full blown zombie. While some low budget films overstay their welcome, Bath Salt Zombies breezes by at a quick 70 minutes. The acting is fittingly over the top and the film makers leave no gory gag go to waste. Another aspect of the film that I loved was the soundtrack. Instead of dwelling on cheesy home made synth music, the soundtrack is filled with fast, loud punk rock courtesy of The Meatmen, The Dwarves, Murder Junkies, ANTISeen and more! And I loved the theme song by World War IX. I can only say that if you love low budget, gory horror movies that have their tongues planted firmly in their cheeks, you can't miss Bath Salt Zombies!

RATING: 9/10
