Bath Salt Zombies Movie Review

Bath Salt Zombies might be one of my newest, favorite movies. It has the most absolutely perfect balance of comedy and faces being torn THE FUCK off. It's a completely different type of zombie movie, because only when you're tripping balls do you actually become a zombie. Smoke some bath salts, eat someones face. Wake up, smoke some bath salts, chow down on someones intestines. Wash, rinse, repeat motherfuckers... Round of applause for the lamest line I've ever written.

The movie opens with a hilariously animated explanation of what bath salts chemically are, how they work, and what happens when you're high as a kite one them. The movie basically follows around a crusty punk all through his addiction to bath salts. I know, totally lame and not really possible, but that's the fucking point! You have this DEA officer chasing after the source of these bath salts, and whenever he comes around a straight up action movie style fight sequence breaks out. As I was watching, I hated this pig but then towards the end I guess I started to feel sorry for him, since he is on the side of good, justice, and doughnuts (not to mention he's pretty fucking hilarious). During this movie you're going to laugh then watch someone get ripped apart, all while listening to sweet, sweet, glorious music. And it's going to keep happening throughout the entire movie and you're going to be pissed when it's all over. This is the first movie in a long time where I can say I appreciated the different, not exactly typical, camera angles and filters used because it just added to the hysteria.

I have no other words except: go get the effin' movie! If you love comedy, blood, and guts, with loving, tender touches of insanity than you won't be disappointed. I don't usually do this and I'm sorry to commit to this so quickly but... I love you Bath Salt Zombies.
