"Bath Salt Zombies"

And Now for Something Completely Different

Amos Lassen

If you love horror films and camp, this is just the film for you. It is a very black comedy yet it shows the power of drugs as it sensationalizes the bath salt epidemic. The film is totally off-the-wall and contains blood and gore, sex and nudity, martial arts and gunfights. You do not need a brain to watch this and you are probably better off without it.

The movie takes place in America of today during the recent bath salts controversy and epidemic. The sale of bath salts in the South and the mid-West has been stopped by a government crackdown. Head shops have been closed down and imports from Britain and Asia have been stopped completely. What this has caused is a black market and dealers have relocated to the northeast. In New York City new strands of bath salts have been developed but in an attempt to outsell them, a young chemist wannabe has developed something even stronger but something has happened. The new bath salts have a side effect—the user turns into a flesh eating zombie and when high on the salts, they are not aware of what they do and they go in and out of consciousness. When they come down they have no clue that they have killed and eaten people. This new batch is also more addictive than any other and the users feel an extreme need to stay high because they become very weak when sober.

Below are some facts about the bath salt epidemic:

"Traditional "bath salts" consist of a combination of amphetamine-like chemicals, mainly mephedrone, MDPV and methylene. Users of the drug have reported feeling incredibly hot, which is why many get naked (in this case, it gives us cause for female nudity). They also develop superhuman strength (it can take five or six men to restrain them) and become so manic and delusional that the term "excited delirium" is being used by the medical community to describe their mental state. The shocking wave of attacks has sparked fears of a real-life zombie outbreak in the south. This led to The Center for Disease Control and Prevention releasing a statement saying it is not aware of any virus that can cause zombie-like behavior. A spokesman said: "MDPV is an illegal and harmful drug and stiff penalties are in place for people who possess or supply it. Drugs ruin lives which is why we are taking tough action against dealers and criminal gangs and helping people to free themselves from the cycle of dependency."

The movie shows us that we can have fun by learning a lesson and I think that is a great idea.
