When it's bad it's very, very bad, but Chris Browne's rite-of-passage movie about a Jamaican boy, Derrick (Ke'von Burton), determined to escape the partisan politics of the ghetto via boxing, has some vibrantly rough edges.

Look out for the ad-hoc road blocks that divide the garrison town of Jungle from the rest of Kingston, the boxing gyms with their tinny bells, and a jaunty enemy-turned-friend (Kadeem Wilson).
