

Circle Jerks
My Career As A Jerk

This feature-length documentary covers the Jerks' career in its entirety, from its early Black Flag connections at the dawn of the '80s, to present day. Through interviews and great live segments, we get the whole sordid story—lineup changes, record-label politics, internal strife and a seemingly never-ending run of snafus. Especially interesting is the section focusing on the band's brief, major-label flirtation during the '90s punk revival, where it was basically ready to acquiesce to label pressure in order to score hits like Green Day. As you'll see in the film, it didn't quite work out that way.

While I've never considered myself a Circle Jerks expert, I kinda feel like I know these guys now. That's what a great rock doc should do, and this one does it in spades. (MVD)
