Evil Nymphomaniac Alligator Women! Repligator!

Tired of trying to comprehend a director's secretive meaning behind his scenes? Tired of trying to solve the mysterious puzzle that opens the life or death box? Tired of the reverse scenes that attempt to tell the story without having to be linear? Sometimes these filmmaking artistic techniques become too tiresome leaving you weary eyed and frustrated. Sometimes scenes just need to be clear cut, plain-jane simple, and meticulously mindless. You're in luck because Repligator is just that – no hidden meanings, no twisted edited, and no problem solving that requires a T-Model calculator.

A classified military experiment, involving the idea of a G.I soldier being replicated to double the military infantry numbers without recruitment, has gone array as the replicator turns the strong, gun-ho male privates into brain-washed nymphomaniac women who much rather expose their privates. Also, when these women experience the slightest orgasm, they transform into scaly, mutant alligator and once bitten by one of these alligator women, their victims turn into homosexual zombies! Wait...what?

Yeah, I'm still trying to wrap my head around the premise of this erotica laden, senseless film (if you want to call it that) by budget director Bret McCormick. I had pre-determined that Repligator had a simple plot – military experience turns women into alligators – but I was incorrect. And just for the record, the alligators are more like rejected raptor prop heads from Jurassic Park resembling nothing like an alligator. The writing is so over the board that I'm pretty sure the amped up hyper Richard Simmons wrote the script.

I'm still trying to comprehend the gay zombies; at least I'm pretty sure the gator-bitten victims were turned into gay zombies as they ignored the advances, and pretty much everything else, of the half naked women and not the male leads. Speaking on the subject of half naked women, the legs with breast weren't too shabby for this mid-90s late night creature feature that might have once been given a showing or two on the Syfy channel.

I shouldn't pass on discussing Gunnar Hansen's role in Repligator; Hansen may headline the movie, but his role is minimal as scientists telling a story of how everything went wrong. He isn't wielding any Texas Chainsaws here even though there was a little homage for him in the opening credits. Scream queen Brinke Stevens also didn't have much of a starring role. Stevens scene was rather pointless toward the whole of the plot, but I'm not surprised considering the film is called Repligator.

Plain and simple, Repligator bares nothing special, yet somehow manages to bare all at the same time. You won't have to think too hard to get the concept, yet you'll be confused at the end. This enigmatic movie challenges all the laws of physics without even spitting out a correct mathematical formula.
