THE PLOT

Locked in a vault, a young investment banker faces a slow death from starvation. Who kidnapped him and why? How can he escape the concrete walls and massive iron door that confine him? His journey of self-discovery has only just begun and his fight for survival will teach him values he previously thought impossible.

HOWS THE MOVIE?

This close encountered film plays off people’s uneasy feelings towards closed-in areas. Of course something like this will either be hit or miss with the viewer; depending on if you buy what the director is selling overall or not. Before I get into that I will say that as far as the acting went with this one I do think it does a great job. Then again when your film only has two actors in the entire thing you best hope the acting is strong, even if one character doesn’t even speak English.

That being said, I wouldn’t say I was an overall fan of this one. One reason would be the fact that I feel the film never does deliver the goods or make a point. We go along with these people and we keep expecting a big reveal or some form of motive for the situation only to be disappointed when the movie does hit the money shot. I think the best way I’d sum up, Iron Doors, is by saying it’s a well-acted affair that is promising, but never fulfills that promise.
