HERE'S EDIE: This is the kind of collection that just could never come about with a son's love and admiration for his mother. While the son that put this together wasn't even born yet when these shows were made, one of the great mid period boomer MILFs was bound and determined not to let being a young widow whose husband left her a big tax bill hold her back. Kicking off her prime time series with a Kurt Weill medley in the original German, and going with 'Bilbao Song' rather than "Mack the Knife", you knew right away she knew what she was doing and wasn't afraid to go for it. This four disc set, giving these shows their first airing since they were run on TV (and you thought there was nothing left in the vaults but public domain movies) includes the entire run of Adams' show and loads of extras. Topped off with old school Hollywood variety with all the big names, classic Muriel Cigar ads, bits from Kovacs and more, this Emmy nominated classic is finally getting the props it deserves. A wonderful trip through the way back machine for anyone that misses what real entertainment was really about.
