

To Jennifer

James Cullen Bressack's new thriller, "To Jennifer," lays claim to being the feature film shot entirely on the iPhone 5. I don't know if the qualification means movies actually were shot on previous iPhone models or that this is an iPhone first. Either way, "To Jennif/Jennifer" only proves that — given sufficient storage and unlimited data usage — it can be done for a mere pittance. But, thousands of amateur porn producers already are well of that unadvertised fact. In the film-within-a-film, an annoying young man suspects his girlfriend of two years, Jennifer, is cheating on him. He is so convinced of it that he enlists the help of his cousin, Steven, to create a video diary of his journey to catch her in the act, as well as to document his heartbreak. No, it doesn't make sense to me, either, but the premise is exponentially more interesting than any of the male characters, who spend the entire film yelling at each other for no good reasons. The really point of this exercise in delayed horror isn't delivered until its last 10 minutes and, by then it's too late. Moral: just because you can do something doesn't mean it will be worth investing time watching it.
