The Return of Europe!

It was awesome to see these guys in action again. I grew up in the era when bands like Europe were huge. Europe is a great example of the so-called hair rock of the 80s. The band displayed diversity – from soft to rock – as well as a lush sound loaded with hooks. I’m pleased to announce that the band still sounds great today, something like three decades later, and that they sound great live. This concert in Sweden shows Europe in beautiful form, turning out sizzling hard rock anthems as well as balladry like the famous hit “Carrie”. The cherry on top for me was the conclusion of the concert with a performance of what is probably Europe’s most beloved and recognizable tune. That’s right, I’m talking about “Final Countdown.” Europe’s live show is exceedingly energetic and the band members show all signs of enjoying themselves, reflecting the obvious joy of the audience members, those lucky souls who got to see this show in person. But that’s okay, because the fun comes through the TV just as strong. With close to thirty songs on tap, this is a bursting at the seams treat for 80s rock fans. Just like me.
