

Comment4

By

RJ Cubarrubia

October 11, 2013 8:30 AM

The Stone Roses surprised many by regrouping in 2011. The following year, they were back on the road after 15 years apart, a trip chronicled in the documentary Made of Stone, which tracks the Manchester rockers' reunion and delves into their history and rise as one of British rock's most celebrated bands. In this preview clip, director Shane Meadows jumps into the band's story with archived footage – including a priceless quote from frontman Ian Brown, who says the Stone Roses will be "the biggest band ever."

Where Does 'The Stone Roses' Rank on Our 100 Best Debut Albums List?

And they were big – huge in the U.K., in fact, though the group only managed a pair of albums before splitting in 1996. Recently, the Stone Roses have said they're working on songs for a new album they expect to release in 2015. In the meantime, Made of Stone will screen in select theaters in November, and will be available on December 3rd on DVD (available here for pre-order) and Blu-ray (available here for pre-order).

Related

- Stone Roses 'Made of Stone' Trailer Tracks Band's Triumphant Return
- Azealia Banks Accuses Stone Roses of Sabotage in Twitter Rant
- The Stone Roses Return to Manchester

MORE NEW & HOT

Cage the Elephant, 'Come A Little Closer'