Buried deep beneath old episodes of Breaking Bad and House Of Cards, you'll find hours and hours of top class music documentaries on Netflix UK from histories of rap and documentaries on punk to detailed profiles of Tupac, Biggie, Jay Z and Katy Perry. Here we round up ten of the best music films to stream on Netflix.

Punk In Africa

Telling the story of punk's rise to popularity during apartheid-era South Africa, this film shows how powerful aggressive music can be in a time of real oppression. Shining a light on how bands such as National Wake made their way in a predominantly white music scene, Punk In Africa charts the genre up to its modern incarnation where ska and hardcore have become a growing influence.

Punk's Not Dead

Taking a look at punk's history in America, this 2007 film shines a light on the DC scene of the '80s with particular attention paid to bands such as Fugazi and Black Flag. A staggering number of artists speak during the 93-minute movie including Henry Rollins, Ian MacKaye and Jello Biafra through to My Chemical Romance frontman Gerard Way, Green Day's Billie Joe Armstrong and Warped Tour manager Lisa Brownlee. It's a great insight into the world of punk away from the tired stories of the Sex Pistols and The Clash.
