Attitude for Destruction

Metal and Horror movies have had a love affair for some time. Metal has always been associated with darker imagery and total debauchery, just like a good horror flick should. You know the old adage, Heavy Metal is the Devil's music, well at least that's what your mom thinks. That being said, that leads me to my review of Attitude for Destruction. Attitude takes you back to the Sunset Strip, when Guns n Roses ruled the day. The story centers around a GnR type band called Hollywood Roses, wasn't that Axl's first band? Anyway, when it is time to get their big break, the only way that the band can get signed is if they ditch the singer, sound familiar? Okay enough! Long story short the band fires the singer, but during the altercation, they accidentally kill him and then after they make it big he comes back to haunt them. It didn't hurt that his girlfriend was a type of sorceress.

Okay, the premise is cheesy, but that's what makes the movie. The movie is totally B-Rated, but it is done well. The acting isn't half bad and the story is good enough to keep you intrigued for the full length of the movie. It has blood, guts, tits and ass, much like any good horror movie. The surprising thing is that the music supplied by Hollywood Roses wasn't too bad. If you're looking for a laugh with your gore then check this out.

- Ragman enjoys a good B-flick every once in awhile.
