GG Allin And The Murder Junkies: The Best Of...

Yet more DVD action from the ultimate punk performer

Ah, dear old GG. Possibly the second best example in the history of punk rock of making the most of a very limited musical talent (after Sid Vicious), Kevin "GG" Allin's greatness lay in his showmanship, or rather his refusal to allow anything – consideration for others, basic standards of decency, the law – get in the way of a good show. Few, if any, performers have wielded half a penis and a handful of their own shit to such effect.

He's now long gone, of course, but his brother and bass player Merle lives on and is presumably happy to keep GG's legacy turning as long as the dollars keep flowing. Fortunately a lot of very brave people were on hand to film his antics, the trick being if he came your way to backpedal very quickly and stay just out of reach.

I assume that one day the vast reams of existing footage will finally run out and Merle will have to make do with re-editing and re-editing. Like most fans, I have seen much of the material here before, though there is a new interview with GG's mother, someone whose life would even inspire sympathy in Simon Cowell. Speaking of which, it's GG's X Factor audition tape that I'd really like to see – shame it'll never happen as the sight of a bald, naked man smeared in his own feculence and homemade tattoos headbutting Cowell, ripping out Louis Walsh's intestines and brutally bumfucking Danni Minogues' plastic smile off her face would probably make the show almost watchable...
