DVD Review – Breaking Her Will

Directed by Bill Zebub

Bill Zebub Productions/MVD

Bill Zebub would have you believe that the villain in Breaking Her Will is indeed “one of the most twisted villains ever to appear onscreen” like the DVD jacket says. For sure, the villain is quite villainous and does quite villainous things, he kidnaps a young girl and tortures her, both physically and psychologically, but does it at such a slow and boring pace that you just want him to kill her already and get it over with.

The main character does do awful and abhorrent things to the poor girl. He ties her up, blindfolds, and gags her and proceeds degrade her, force her to fellate him, rape her, and prick the bottoms of her feet with pins. But in this day and age, it just isn't shocking. Anyone who's ever seen a film from the Saw franchise or Hostel would find Breaking Her Will's attempt at shocking behaviour laughable, as the protagonist slowly overacts his way through one of the least compelling story-lines ever conceived. Granted, Bill Zebub was probably not shooting for high drama when he set out to make Breaking Her Will but if he set out to make a truly shocking sleaze film that deserved quotes on the cover like “... I thought it was impossible for a film to make me uncomfortable and nervous. I was wrong” like his does then he should have tried harder or given up entirely.

Breaking Her Will should be a great sleazy ol' time, it really should be. It's got copious amounts of nudity, a weirdo villain, the sexual domination of women, and more nudity. It should really be a great joy to watch but it's paced so poorly that it all comes off as horrifically boring. Things that only take a moment in real life and should only really be given a passing mention on film like the villain talking to himself or eating a sandwich take up minutes upon minutes of agonizing time.

Breaking Her Will does have some fairly funny moments at least but they were certainly not done on purpose and occupy only a smidgen of the hour and a half of mostly mind-numbing boredom.
