

Reviews by Amos Lassen

Books, Movies and Judaica and Random Thoughts About Whatever

“THE LOST EMPIRE”— Three Beautiful Women

“The Lost Empire”

Three Beautiful Women

Amos Lassen

Three beautiful women who are members of a lost tribe battle a male who has plan to destroy their lost empire. In a land in a distant past, three beautiful women, members of a lost tribe, battle a male genius with diabolical plans to destroy their “Lost Empire.” Jim Wynorski decided to cram this film with everything he loved and after a limited theatrical release followed by an initial release on VHS, the movie seemed destined to be a cult hit.

The film opens with a woman sporting an extra large pair of breasts buying jewelry. She is Angel (Melanie Vincz) and she knows she must stop Lee Chuck, and his earthly doppelganger Dr. Sin Do (Angus Scrim). On his remote island, Dr. Sin Do has some kind of competition where only women with big boobs are allowed to compete? But the competition must be in groups of three and Angel has two more friends with big boobs.

They are 'Native American' goddess Whitestar (Raven De La Croix), and she cements her Native American creed by occasionally saying 'kimosabe', and speaking in broken Indian English once or twice in this movie. The other leg of our trio belongs to hardcore inmate Heather (the late Angela Aames) who we spot in a prison yard scrap with a leather-clad dominatrix. Now that Angel has a crew, it's time to take a private jet to the island of Dr. Sin Do and his big boob competition which is run by the completely evil Karo (Robert Tessier). First the girls strip, probed and stuff. Sin Do needs the Eyes of Avatar to rule the world and Rick the FBI agent has unwittingly brought them to the Lost Island. Can Angel, Whitestar, Heather and a bunch of other healthy girls stop the evil Sin Do and his weapon of mass destruction?

We can't say that 'The Lost Empire' is a good movie, at least not with a clear conscious, but it is fun to sit through. It is both intentionally campy and unintentionally campy and very funny, intentionally or not.

'The Lost Empire' was considered a horrible movie when it came out in 1985.. But today, looking back with a nostalgic eye 'The Lost Empire' is a borderline classic.

The film opens with a crazy scene that sets the stage for the rest of the craziness that is to follow. Forget your troubles, grab a beer and sit back and enjoy for a while—you will either love this or hate it.