Hit the road with Ray Romano in '95 Miles to Go,' now on DVD

See what it's like to perform stand-up comedy on tour with the best of them in the backstage documentary "95 Miles to Go," featuring Ray Romano. The fly-on-the-wall film recently rolled onto DVD.

"95 Miles to Go"

During the dizzying run of his hit sitcom "Everybody Loves Raymond," Ray Romano returned to his roots with a stand-up comedy tour in 2004, joined by his former opening act, Tom Caltabiano.

This unvarnished documentary directed by Caltabiano was recorded from the back seat of their rental car by a film student.

They shot 130 hours of material and boiled it down to this funny film, which ran on HBO in 2007. It captures an intimate look at the process of performing comedy in front of live audiences while living out of a suitcase.

R, 79 minutes. DVD extras: more than two hours of bonus material, including deleted and extended scenes, commentary, a photo gallery, Romano's performance in Kansas City, two question-and-answer sessions and a photo gallery. From VSC. Released May 22.
