Now for some new music titles you might want to catch up with...

Bob Dylan & The Band: Down On The Floor (The Basement Tapes) is the latest documentary DVD from the Chrome Dream series on the legendary singer/songwriter and shows how his collaborations with The Band changed his music for the better and launched them as a major group at the time, even if they could not hold it together and he was having his own personal problems. This has some footage from Scorsese's The Last Waltz and makes for a fine companion to that film showing the back story on how The Band formed, what their big successes were and tracing back their roots to American music, though they were technically a Canadian band.

This is another solid, thorough look at Dylan's career as well, though I wished a little more of the Nashville Skyline album was discussed, it is still great to have all this original, licensed music and some songs you may not have heard or are rarer. The original title was Bob Dylan, he Band and The Basement Tapes, but the title was shortened for whatever reason. Extras include Mickey Jones interview clip and text contributor bios.

Just as strong from Chrome Dreams is David Bowie Under Review 1969 – 1973: The Calm Before The Storm which is part of a series of excellent coverage on Bowie that includes the following:

David Bowie (Deluxe Edition 1967 CD Set/debut album)

This strong installment covers his next three albums after 1967 including Space Oddity, The Man Who Sold The World and Hunky Dory, which set him on a course that made him one of the most important music artists of all time. These works are not discussed enough, not as much as they were back in the day and I was particularly pleased with how thorough this installment was. Don't miss this one. Extras include a quiz, text contributor bios and brief Birth Of Ziggy clip.

Our lone concert entry here is Etta James: Live At Montreux 1993 on Blu-ray and a pretty good show with 11 songs, but Eagle has gone even further by adding even more performances from some of her other Montreux performances (included here as extra) from 1975, 1977, 1978, 1989 and 1990 including Tell Mama, At Last and W.O.M.A.N., while Hold On I'm Coming and I Just Want To Make Love To You are among the main music set. Seeing all this in total shows us how the survivor and one-time Atlantic Records recording artist (she helped put the label on the map) was always a fine performer and a formidable singer. I liked the 1993 show, but really enjoyed the other performances as they also show some of her finest work and reaffirm James as one of the most important vocalists of her time and even of all time.

This also goes further than most of the fine Montreux/Eagle Blu-rays have to date, so it is nice to have all this content on one Blu-ray disc. A paper pullout with brief, small text is the only other extra.

Another solid Eagle Blu-ray is the documentary Produced By George Martin (2012) celebrating the life and career of one of the most important, innovative and creative music producers of all time. Francis Hanly directed the new material in what amounts to both a thorough biography of Martin (he is even interviewed by his son Giles) from his birth to early life to military career to getting a job at EMI's small Parlophone subdivision that would change his life and music history forever.

Many others are interviewed and we see his life with his family, with his wife whom he is still happily together with, his Beatles work and the amazing, often forgotten work he did afterwards that should be more remembered. This is a very thorough, complete program that could have gone on for hours, but it works well and there is a bonus section 52 minutes long of extended interviews that include some footage used in the main program.

Finally (also from Eagle) we have the DVD double set Queen: Greatest Video Hits which has 33 music video clips from the career of one of the most successful and controversial Rock bands of all time. We had originally covered a double Volume One set with less content at this link:
