

with HBO and Showtime, there's also lots of R-rated content. Season 2 is on the way.

"The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams: The Renewal" (Timeless, 1978, $9.99). This extended episode (73 minutes here) from the second season stars Dan Haggerty as a loose version of the real-life 19th century mountain man, living in the wilderness with his grizzly bear Ben and his pals Mad Jack (Denver Pyle) and Nakoma (Don Shanks). This episode has an Easter theme and Patrick Wayne (son of John) is a guest. Lovely Utah locations provide the location scenery.

"Eric Clapton: The 1970s Review" (MVD, 2013, $19.95). Unauthorized documentary by the makers of "Eric Clapton: The 1960s Review" follows the musician into that decade as he forms Derek and the Dominos, and joins Delaney & Bonnie & Friends, eventually finding solo success. Interviewed are Bonnie Bramlett, Bobby Whitlock, the Albert Brothers, etc.

"100 Years of Wrigley Field" (MLB/A&E/Lionsgate, 2014, $19.98, featurettes). Feature-length documentary about Chicago's famed baseball field chronicles the site's history and includes eye-catching footage and story-spinning talking heads, including Ernie Banks, Billy Williams, Ron Santo, Ferguson Jenkins, etc.

"The Science of Measurement" (Athena, 2013, $34.99, three episodes, text biography; 12-page booklet). Marcus du Sautoy hosts these documentary miniseries about time, length, mass, brightness, current, temperature and moles, among other aspects of the title subject. Very entertaining, despite the potentially dry subject.
